The 7th Living Knowledge Conference was an intense, fantastic and warm moment of connecting with people around the world that share a set of ideas, practices and commitments towards community based participatory research and integration of community partnerships in learning and teaching processes in order to produce a more Responsible Research and Innovation. The possibility of sharing experiences and ideas with so many interesting and engaged people open the orison of what I considered possible doing in order to strength science and society relations. It gave me confidence and reinforced my motivation to engage my research and community work. To understand that I’m not alone gave me comfort. I was able to realize that the difficulties and challenges that I face are not of my own but of this great community of engaged people and to share and discuss this challenges makes it possible to overcome them in a better manner, with improved knowledge and more fruitful practices that can produce better and stronger outcomes. The Living Knowledge Conference was a moment of collective capacity building and of personal and professional development, with so meaningful and constructive insights and I want to thank the organization and all involved in the event for this incredible experience. I will be present in the 8 LK Conference and recommend to all to attend the even!
